Commissioner Daisy Lynum Welcomes the NBA to the Northwest Community Center

ORLANDO, FL – Commissioner Lynum welcomed the Orlando Magic and the NBA as they presented the Northwest Community Center with a newly renovated Reading and Learning center. The NBA Cares Program, in conjunction with the NBA Finals 2009 and the Orlando Magic, dedicated the new center on June 10, stocked with new books, a game room, and a renovated technology center outfitted with brand-new laptop computers and a printer. New furniture was also part of the renovations.

Commissioner Lynum was joined in attendance by NBA Commissioner David Stern, numerous NBA Legends, NBA representatives, Magic Chief Operating Officer Alex Martins, Mayor Buddy Dyer and other local elected officials.

Each NBA team is dedicated to giving back to their respective communities and the Orlando Magic has sponsored over 6 projects in Orlando's District 5. Commissioner Lynum is very appreciative for the renovations, particularly the computer labs because of her national presence regarding broadband policy deployment, adoption and usage application for unserved and underserved communities. "These improvements move another underserved population to another internet access level for learning, research and games." said Commissioner Lynum.

NBA Cares is the league's social responsibility initiative that builds on the NBA's long tradition of addressing important social issues in the United States and around the world.
