

Thank you all for getting the fountains to work. My apologies for getting back so late to you, but I wanted my autistic son to taste the water himself. When Autistic kids such as Christopher get thirsty, they run up to the nearest water source to drink. Whether it is a puddle on the ground or someone else's water bottle, they just jump in and drink.

Having a working water fountain at the park by his residential program will help me teach him how to use an appropriate drinking water source. Thank you. It is the little things like this that mean a lot to us citizens!!
